- Tell us how you have financed your training and education so far.

Financial Statement Guidelines

A written statement is required containing the total cost of the training, certificate or rating sought. Also include written confirmation of how you intend to fund the training. (Please note that the scholarship is paid upon successful completion of the training sought so you will have to initially fully fund the training).

For the statement containing the cost of training, a written statement from the applicant will be sufficient but we will also accept a quote from the training organization/instructor.

In either case, please follow these guidelines carefully:

1. Take your own skill level into account when estimating the number of hours required to accomplish your stated training, (some people require more/less training than others).

NOTE: The flight training organization's brochure stating training costs are usually for the minimum hours required so may not reflect the true hours for each individual. Please confer with your instructor to establish a true estimate of training hours required. You may use the published hourly aircraft rental and ground instruction costs.

2. Once you have established the number of training hours required multiply that number by the hourly rate for aircraft, and instructor.
3. Do the same as above for ground instruction and/or simulator training if applicable.
4. Calculate the cost of a check ride, if applicable.
5. Total up the overall cost of training and include in the financial statement.

NOTE: If you intend to use a credit card, a personal loan or borrowed money, you are not required to specify names or account numbers, just specify the expected amount from that source.

We require confirmation that you have access to sufficient funds to complete the training.

Additionally, please refer to the "Tips to create a winning application" document for further guidance. Note: this document is a general reference document to help you with aviation scholarships and is not specific to this scholarship alone.
